The Development Research Centre On Citizenship, Participation And Accountability (Citizens DRC) has worked with universities, research institutes and non-governmental organisations in more than 25 countries to explore the new ways that citizens are shaping our states and societies.

Citizenship and Accountability presents a new paradigm of information-age citizenship for Americans: a simple system for taking positive control of the flood of information to which we are all exposed, processing that information in accordance with our individual beliefs and values, and holding elected officials accountable for representing those beliefs and values.

In the development field in recent years, increasing attention has been given to understanding and promoting methods which enable relatively powerless people to hold more powerful people, organisations and institutions to account. Many development practitioners see efforts towards this kind of accountability as having the potential to transform power relations in favour of the less powerful.

Citizenship and Accountability: litigating customary law and traditional leadership under South Africa’s democratic constitution. It is twenty-five years since the transition to democracy in South Africa. Some of the most enduring challenges to that transition have concerned the role of customary law and traditional leadership in the new democratic state.
